From The DUBLIN REGISTER OF FAME, June 17, 1770.

To the PRINTER,

IN matters of public concern, something more than negative virtue is justly expected from every member of a free state. The present critical and important seasons call upon every pen to write, and every tongue to speak, to rouse the people from the lethargy in which they have too long slept; to teach them, if not to cure, at least to palliate the distemper, and nobly to endeavour, by a manly exercise of public virtue, to free themselves and their posterity from the accumulated injuries inflicted on them by the oppressive and tyrannic laws of English parliaments.

As an Irishman, I think it is my duty to forewarn my countrymen, that they can place no confidence in the present temporizing language of their oppressors; and that they can never reasonably hope for a repeal of those laws which prescribe slavery to be the lot of Ireland, unless they universally associate and resolve, and firmly adhere to their associations and resolutions, to be content to use the product and manufactures of their own country, until enabled to purchase those of Great Britain, by enjoying the benefits of a free trade. Remember, my countrymen, I tell you, they will not do you justice until it becomes their interest: persevere a while, and I promise you they will soon perceive how necessary your commerce is to their interest:—Be not amused from your purpose by fair words, nor yet by tantalizing and ignominious favours, such as that law which they lately enacted to permit the people of Ireland, as a condescending indulgence, to raise Tobacco in their fields. Time Danaos et dona ferentes Be steady; and be assured of compleat redress.—Until their actions convince you they mean to become your sincere friends, be as much upon your guard against them as you would against a foreign and a proclaimed enemy. Again I repeat it, Be steady and determined; but be cool and calm, and let no motives whatsoever tempt you to sedition or disorder; they would become powerful arms in the hands of your adversaries. And, when I have explored the principles and intentions of the present reign, you will see, my friends, whether my advice to you is well founded or not; you will see what you are to expect from the generosity, the integrity of those Min[illegible] I shall do it briefly in the course of two or three letters; and I shall leave it to other writers [illegible] the venerable pages of our antient History [illegible] our INDISPUTABLE TITLE to Freedom and INDEPENDENCE.

I shall [illegible] kings; and will endeavour [illegible] sketch of a system, which the [illegible] most gracious King have [illegible] the present reign, a system of which as I said before, no discrimination can justly be made, but what arose from opportunity.

The Lieutenants M'Callister, Armstrong, Reed and Rudulph, distinguished themselves remarkably. Too much praise cannot be given to those gentlemen for their prowess and example. Capt. Bradford, of the train, who volunteered it with me for the purpose of taking direction of the artillery, deserves my warmest thanks for his zeal and activity. I am personally indebted to Capt. Rudulph and Dr. Irvine of the dragoons, who attended me during the expedition, for their many services.

I beg leave to present your Excellency with the flag of the fort by the hands of Mr. M'Callister, the gentleman into whose possession it fell.

It is needless for me to explain my reasons for the instantaneous evacuation of the fort Your Excellency's knowledge of the post, will suggest fully the propriety of it. The event confirms it.

Among the many unfortunate circumstances which crossed our wishes, none was more so than the accidental absence of Col. Buskirk and the greatest part of his regiment. They had set out on an expedition up the North-River the very night of the attack. A company of vigilant Hessians had taken their place in the fort, which rendered the secrecy of approach more precarious, and, at the same time diminished the object of the enterprize by a reduction of the number of the garison. Major Sutherland fortunately saved himself by a soldier's counterfeiting his person. This imposition was not discovered till too late.

I intended to have burnt the barracks, but on finding a number of sick soldiers and women with young children in them, humanity forbad the execution of my intention. The key of the Magazine could not be found, nor could it be broke open in the little time we had to spare, many attempts have been made to that purpose by the Lieuts. M'Callister and Reed. It was completely impracticable to bring off any pieces of artillery. I consulted Captain Bradford on the point, who confirmed me in my opinion. The circumstance of spiking them being trivial, it was omitted altogether.

After most of the troops had retired from the works, and were passed and passing the canal, a fire of musquetry commenced from a few straglers, who had collected in an old work on the right of the main fort. Their fire being ineffectual and the object trifling, I determined not to break in upon the order of retreat, but continued passing the defile in front. I cannot conclude this relation without expressing my warmest thanks to Lord Stirling for the full patronage I received from him in every stage of the enterprise. I must also return my thanks to the cavalry, for their vigilant execution of the duties assigned them.

Captain Rudulph waits on your Excellency with these dispatches. I beg leave to refer to this officer for any further explanation that may be required.

I have the honour to be, Sir, with the most perfect respect, your Excellency's most obedient, and most humble servant,

BOSTON, Aug. 19.

On Saturday, the 7th of this month, the Chevalier de la LUSERNE had a public interview with the Honourable Council of this State, at their Chamber in the State House. There were present on this occasion, M. de Valnais, Consul of France, M. Marbois, Councellor to Parliament, M. de Chevagnes, a Captain in the Royal Navy of France, with his Officers, and other French gentlemen, now residing in Boston—as also a large number of gentlemen of the most respectable orders in this state. Soon after the Chevalier had been seated, he rose, the Council and the company present rising at the same time, when he addressed the Council in the French language, of which the following is a translation.

Gentlemen,

ALTHOUGH I have got laid open the Character with which it hath pleased the King, my master, to invest me, yet I cannot believe myself bound to refuse the opportunity you have presented to me, of testifying my gratitude for the proofs I have received of your kind attention, from the moment of my arrival in this capital of the State of Massachusetts.

I present myself before your Board only as a private person: But I am a Frenchman; and this alone is sufficient to make me feel the highest admiration of all the memorable actions of the inhabitants of this country, and an unbounded respect for the courage, the prudence and firmness which have ever accompanied your conduct, through the course of that happy revolution which has assured your liberty. Such, gentlemen, are the sentiments which I pray you believe me penetrated with, until I shall be able publicly to assure the Representatives of these States in Congress of the affection and friendship of the King, my master, and of his earnest desire to concur with every measure that may strengthen the bonds of the alliance he has already formed with you.

To this address, the President of the Council made the following reply.

SIR,

THE Council of this State feel themselves happy in the opportunity which now presents of congratulating you on your safe arrival in this capital. Your character justly entitles you to the full confidence of this Board, and the warm affection of its members. We pledge you, Sir, our confidence and our affection.

This Council took an early part in the joy which diffused itself throughout these United States, upon that very interesting event the alliance formed with his most Christian Majesty; and it will be their constant care, in their particular department, to render the union as lasting as it is beneficial.

SIR,

We have a firm confidence, that under the smiles of Heaven, upon the exertions of this people, strengthened by those of our illustrious ally, this great revolution will be productive of the happiness of both nations, and perpetuate the liberty of America.

The President of the Council then acquainted the Chevalier, that a number of principal Magistrates of the State, the Clergy and other gentlemen of distinction, had done themselves the honour to be present at this interview: Upon which the Chevalier and the company mutually paid their civilities, by a respectable bow.

After this the Chevalier, the council and company present, repaired to the balcony and front windows of the Council-Chamber, to view some manœuvres performed in State-street, by the light-infantry company, a detachment from the train of artillery, and from the regiment of militia in this State: The infantry fired three vollies, and the train a number of cannon. Many spectators were assembled on the occasion, and the public ceremonies of the day were received with much satisfaction, and crowned with a general joy.

Tuesday last arrived here three vessels from Havana, one commanded by Capt. Sears, in 14 days from that place: By them we have a conformation of the substance of what came by the way of Newfoundland on Saturday last, that war had at last commenced between Spain and England. A snow packet had arrived at the Havana, in a short passage from the Groyn in Spain, with dispatches from the Court of that nation, and with a declaration of war against Great Britain, or such orders for Hostilities as were equivalent to it. Accordingly all the British subjects in the Havana had been taken up and confined, even some that had resided there a number of years. The Packet brought an account that the Spanish fleet had sailed from Cadiz, consisting of 28 ships of the line, to join the Brest fleet under Count D'Orvilliers. The junction of those fleets will make up such a formidable naval armament, as has not been seen operating at once for many years in Europe: So that we may soon hear of some descent upon the British or Irish Coast, of some capital naval action in the channel, or that the British fleet is shut up in the ports of England, and the channel, that source of British commerce, entirely at the command of the combined squadrons of France and Spain. For by the last accounts the British ships of the line, destined for the defence of their own coasts, did not exceed 30, a number not more than equal to the force of Count D'Orvilliers alone.

By the above mentioned vessels from Havana, we further learn that the Spaniards had 7000 troops on the island of Cuba and that 2000 were embarking on an expedition against Pensacola, and the British settlements in that quarter.
